The recent newsletter was just fabulous.....shows so well the diversity of your research, of how wide a net you’ve cast, the diversity and talents of the staff, as well the brief accounts of the volunteers, and the importance of citizen science.” ~VCE Supporter

VCE ended 2009 – our second full year of existence – in strong shape. Staff achieved tangible progress towards our ambitious wildlife research and conservation agenda. We solidified our core initiatives, diversified our breadth, and added several innovative dimensions. Importantly, we kept our citizen scientists engaged, strengthened our numerous collaborations, and broadly communicated our results through an array of channels. We weathered 2009’s challenging economic climate and again ended our fiscal year in the black – we are poised to enjoy a robust 2010. As this report highlights, contributions from a legion of individuals like you constitute VCE’s programmatic and financial lifeblood. Your continued support will be instrumental as we expand our conservation programs across the Americas.

We sincerely thank each and every one of our supporters.

“Thanks for all your great work! You all make a terrific team.”

~VCE Partner

The Vermont Center for Ecostudies advances the conservation of wildlife through research, monitoring and citizen engagement.
VCE hired two new employees to begin 2010. Judith Scarl took the helm of Mountain Birdwatch and Sara Zahendra provides invaluable assistance with an array of projects as our Biological Technician.

VCE biologists coordinated an invited symposium at the 2009 American Ornithologists’ Union meeting in Philadelphia, presenting two scientific papers.

Sara Zahendra

Judith Scarl

Thanks to the Vermont Loon Recovery Project and its dedicated volunteers, 66 loon pairs attempted nesting, and 53 successfully hatched 83 eggs, with a record 74 chicks surviving through August.

"...it is gratifying to see the progress that has been made in protecting loons...We realize, however, that threats and challenges to loon well-being remain...

~VCE Supporter

VCE staff and partners used cutting edge technology to unravel the mysteries of songbird migration by attaching 36 solar geolocators to adult Bicknell’s Thrushes in the Green and Catskill Mountains, and coordinating with our Canadian colleagues to mark 34 birds in Quebec and the Maritimes. We deployed another 45 geolocators on Bobolinks in Vermont, Nebraska and Oregon.

Staff co-organized a community conservation workshop and held two intensive weeklong field training workshops in the Dominican Republic to help build the capacity of our Dominican and Haitian colleagues.

The Vermont Vernal Pool Mapping Project identified 830 potential vernal pools across the northern 6 counties of Vermont and trained nearly 150 volunteers to field-verify them.
VCE staff will undertake the development of a 5-year strategic plan to solidify our directions and proactively meet upcoming conservation needs, making the best use of donor contributions.

VCE biologists hope to recover at least 50% of the geolocators deployed on Bobolinks and Bicknell’s Thrushes in 2009 to retrieve ground-breaking information on migratory routes, timing, and wintering locations.

The second generation Vermont Breeding Bird Atlas will complete final design elements to create a website and a state-of-the-art book on the status of breeding birds in Vermont.

“Thanks for the wonderful work you do and for sharing with all of us.”
~VCE Volunteer

From 2002 to 2007 volunteer butterfly enthusiasts spent thousands of hours afield in an effort to record the status and distribution of Vermont butterflies, the first systematic statewide butterfly atlas ever to be undertaken. In 2010 we will share these data with students, land managers, policy makers, naturalists, scientists and others on the VBS web page.

The International Bicknell’s Thrush Conservation Group will disseminate its finalized action plan to policy-makers, land managers, biologists and others to begin implementation of a unified range wide strategy to conserve this vulnerable species and its habitats for future generations.

The Mountain Birdwatch Project will establish over 400 new survey points across the mountains of the Northeast and launch Mountain Birdwatch 2.0, featuring revised and more rigorous monitoring protocols for montane birds.

VCE strives to minimize expenses, to ensure that your contribution achieves the greatest conservation impact possible.
45 Bobolinks and 70 adult Bicknell’s Thrushes in VT, NY, NE, OR, and Canada received miniature solar geolocators in the hopes of yielding critical information on migratory patterns and population connectivity.

20 Whip-poor-will Volunteers surveyed 18 routes throughout VT as part of a region-wide monitoring effort.

28 Vermont Breeding Bird Atlas Volunteers wrote species accounts; 18 Volunteer Editors reviewed them.

30 Game Wardens assisted the Vermont Loon Recovery Project.

Nearly 700 individuals, businesses and private foundations supported VCE with at least one financial contribution in 2009.

At least 48 pounds of Bird Friendly® coffee were sipped at the VCE office.

558,649 birds of 285 species were reported to Vermont eBird.

120 Adopt-a-lake Volunteers monitored loons during the summer months.

VCE biologists published 5 papers in peer-reviewed scientific journals.

11 Birdathon Teams raised $5,000 in one day to support VCE’s programs.

20 Forest Bird Monitoring Volunteers spent over 200 hours surveying breeding birds at 10 different National Parks, tallying 2,989 individual birds of 107 species.

VCE staff presented 37 lectures or programs in VT, NH, NY, MA and PA.

60 Vernal Pool Mapping Project Volunteers field-verified and collected data on 85 vernal pools in northern VT.

1 Volunteer organized 35,000 butterfly records for the Vermont Butterfly Atlas.

52 Bicknell’s Thrushes and 44 Blackpoll Warblers were banded in the mountains of the Northeast; 20 Bicknell’s Thrushes and 195 resident individuals were banded in the mountains of the Dominican Republic.

185 Loonwatch Volunteers counted 228 adult loons on Vermont’s lakes and ponds.

2 loons were rescued from fishing line and 1 from a pond that was too small to allow take-off.

VCE staff consumed at least 200 bags of potato and tortilla chips at the lunch table.

6 veterinarians, 2 wildlife rehabilitators, 1 waterbird specialist and the staffs of Tufts and VINS were on call to assist with loon emergencies.

167 Mountain Birdwatch Volunteers spent over 1,200 hours hiking the mountains of VT, MA, NY, NH and ME to monitor high-elevation songbirds.

47,283 birds of 249 species were reported to Hispaniola eBird.

“Thanks for the great work that you do. We really enjoy the newsletter, and try to attend any talks given by your staff” ~VCE Volunteer

VCE Events

Field Ornithology Course
April 29–June 5
The Montshire Museum of Science, Vermont Center for Ecostudies (VCE), and Cornell Lab of Ornithology are teaming up to offer this world-class program on birding and bird behavior. For more information: www.vtecostudies.org

Birdathon 2010

Once again, Team VCE will take to the field in May to celebrate the return of our migratory birds. We invite you to get out and join us for Birdathon 2010. Form your own Birdathon team and enjoy a spring day outside, or sponsor the VCE team. For more information: www.vtbirdathon.org
